About the Course

This course is designed for practicing psychotherapists and counsellors who want to become clinical supervisors and obtain a post-graduate qualification. The programme will allow counsellors and psychotherapists from any modality to train as supervisors. Students' learning is supported through experiential work and a significant amount of direct tutor contact.

The Minster Centre prides itself on offering small study groups, personal attention and a friendly, supportive learning environment which encourages personal development. Applicants are not required to have been in recent academic training in order to be considered for a place on this course. Students will be able to sign up for either the one year Post Graduate Diploma or the two-year MA programme, both of which are validated by Middlesex University. The course will follow the same syllabus as the Minster Centre Supervision Diploma for the first three modules with the addition of a further clinical supervision module for the PG Dip.

Students registered and continuing on for the MA will attend an extra three weekends on research awareness and methods which lead to undertaking a piece of independent research, in the second year. This will be overseen by a research supervisor and supported by the course staff.

Course Content Summary

- Two core academic modules which develop students' in-depth knowledge of the main theoretical concepts of effective supervision plus opportunities for students to integrate this knowledge into their practice.
- Two Supervision Skills-in-practice (Practicum) modules which lay the foundations for effective and ethical supervisory practice and explores supervisory procedural issues relating to clinical responsibility, contracting, risk assessment, auditing and professional record keeping.
- For MA students – teaching in research methods and ethics and research supervision will prepares students to complete a 15,000 word dissertation.
- Forms of assessment include an essay, case report, reflective assignments, a 40-minute presentation, a 15,000-word dissertation and a portfolio.
- This course requires that the student completes a minimum of 40 hours supervision practice and 21 hours supervision of supervision across both practicum modules (1&2).

Detailed Course Content

1. Supervisory Theory

This module provides the opportunity for students to develop a sophisticated critically-reflective grasp of the main theoretical concepts and philosophical positions that inform effective ethical supervisory practice. Students will be given an in-depth grounding in Shohet and Hawkins' model of clinical supervision and this will be integrated with a human development perspective in supervisory practice. Significant attention will be paid to understanding complex interpersonal and intrapersonal processes and power dynamics operating both in individual supervision and also in group contexts.

Students will write a 5000 word essay: 'Supervision: managing a complex professional role in practice.'

2. Integrating Theory into Clinical Supervision

This module provides a range of learning opportunities for students to integrate their theoretical knowledge into effective ethical supervisory practice. The learning will be delivered in experiential practice sessions that are designed to support the students in making links between theoretical concepts and supervisory strategies as well as being able to critically evaluate supervisory interventions. This module aims to equip students with advanced skills in working with the interpersonal and intrapersonal processes of supervision. It also supports the students in synthesising a personal integrative approach from existing supervisory knowledge, theory and research. Students will be assessed on a 40 minute presentation delivered to an audience of tutors and peers on their choice of a topic relevant to supervision and a 3000-word assignment titled 'A reflective commentary on developing a personal approach to supervision.'

3. Clinical Supervision Practicum 1

This module represents the skills-in-practice component of the course and aims, in combination with the other supervision modules, to lay the foundations for effective and ethical supervisory practice. Students will receive a thorough grounding in supervisory practice procedures including clinical responsibility; contracting; risk assessment; auditing; and professional record keeping. Students will be given opportunities to reflect on interpersonal and intrapersonal processes in supervision and to critically evaluate their own interventions.

This course requires that the student completes a minimum of 40 hours supervision practice and 21 hours supervision of supervision across both practicum modules (1&2).

Students will produce

- A portfolio containing: logs of supervision; logs of supervision of supervision; a sample contract for work with one supervisee or supervision group; and notes from two sessions.
- A 3000-word self-reflective account of their development as a supervisor to date.

4. Clinical Supervision Practicum 2

Students will build upon the foundations of supervisory practice laid down in Practicum 1. In this module students will be facilitated in developing an advanced set of competencies including: the ability to monitor impact of own subjective processes on supervisory practice; the ability to foster supervisees' professional autonomy; and accurately monitor supervisees' clinical competence. The module also aims to enhance students' awareness of and ability to make productive use of unconscious relational processes operating within a supervisory context.

Students will produce logs of supervision and supervision of supervision and a 5000-word case report

5. Dissertation

Students continuing on the MA programme will undertake further study in research approaches relevant to the field and in research ethics. Students will present a 15,000-word dissertation on a topic of their choice that is relevant to the practice of psychotherapy and counselling and that demonstrates mastery of a complex and specialist topic, critical understanding of research methods and ethical issues and a capacity for sustained critical reflexive awareness. Students will prepare for this by attending research teaching and producing a research proposal for ethical approval. Students will also have access to a dissertation supervisor.

Dissertation topics may cover any area relevant to supervision of psychotherapy or counselling. Students may undertake work based exclusively on existing literature or based on fieldwork such as interviews, surveys or observations. In all cases the work must go beyond description to offer reflective and critical discussion, which contributes to knowledge in the field. Students will need to reflect on the link between their own subjectivity and the subject of the dissertation; the implications of the study for their own work and for clinical supervision practice more generally and the links between theoretical concepts and research methods.

Supervision Practice and Placements

Students will agree suitable supervisee and supervision of supervision arrangements with course tutors. Students may use work undertaken with supervisees in their private practice, with supervisees in the course of their employment (with suitable agreement with their employers) or supervisees seen in
